

Sir, Neither your name nor that of the Chinamen was mentioned to Mr Dundas. I had forgot them both. I simply told him the person I wished to take with me was in some office. It is very painful to me after what passed on the outside of your door, & the presumptuous manner in which you refused to hear any explanation, again to address myself to you, but I feel it a sort of duty, tho a very trifling one; & beg your indulgence for this my anxious desire of being accurate. My calling on you this morning was owing to a mistake of your own people
