

As soon as I was sufficiently recovered to be able to go abroad, I determined to go aboard the ship, and enquire what was become of my servant: accordingly I hired a boat, & the wind being fair, we set sail. When we were got abreast the fort, the wind suddenly shifted, & came right ahead; which obliged us to go above 2 miles about: and it was with much ado that we got alongside the vessel at last. The Captain could give me no further account of my servant, than that he had been seen adrift on a piece of floating timber, & as the tide was setting in towards shore at the time, that he, no doubt, had landed & safely, & was probably gone up the country. As I was still in a weak state, and I felt the air growing very cold, I was obliged to refuse the Captain's pressing invitation to stay dinner, and bidding him adieu, was returning to my boat, when a sudden clamour up aloft, & cries of "avast, avast" arrested my attention. Looking up, I was struck with the sight of one of the sailors tumbling down headlong among the rigging, apparently at the risk of breaking his neck. He fell backwards on the deck with a thumping noise, and was so stunned by the fall as to be unable to speak for some time. At length he recovered his senses, & after he had looked agape around him for some time, he got up, & walked away with great composure. We were greatly surprised at finding that he had received no material hurt. On coming back we met with two or three disagreeable accidents; we went too near the sandbank, & got the boat aground before we were aware of it. We were almost an hour in trying to get her off, & without success; at last the tide coming in, set her afloat. After that by some mismanagement or other we drove astern one of the small boats, that were lying about there, with their oars hanging out astope, and upset it; & in trying to assist the men to right her, we got aground again. Then again we were visited by a custom house officer, who asked us to show our permit - I told him I had none, & was not at all aware that 'twas necessary; he said we were liable to a heavy penalty, for going on board that ship without a permit; for she was under particular circumstances which he explained but which I did not rightly understand. Whether what he said was true or whether he was imposing upon me <sup>he had the air of an honest man,</sup> I don't know; ~~but~~ <sup>but</sup> I was glad to get rid of him by giving him  $\frac{1}{2}$  a crown, & telling him I was a stranger. When I got home, I ~~found~~ found myself completely tired. I ordered some fish to be ~~be~~ cooked for me. I begged to be excused supping with the family, & before 8 o'clock I was abed & asleep. I slept sound till rather latish the next morning. As soon as I was thoroughly awake, I got up, and dressed myself & sent a note to the acting magistrate of the place, begging permission to wait upon him. He returned me a civil answer, informing me that he should be at leisure between 9 & 10 o'clock - accordingly I went. He explained to him the affairs of my servant, & begged his advice how to act. He told me he supposed I was aware that by the laws of this country no man could be held as a slave, or detained in any service against his will. Upon my telling him that the man was in my debt - Ah! says he, that alters the case - if he be in your debt, most absurdly you may take out a writ against him, & scour his person wherever you can find him; but as to the money, I suppose you hardly expect ever to recover that again; & as to the fellow's services, according to the account you give of him, I don't think they are any adequate compensation for the trouble you are likely to have in finding him, & the trouble you must have in keeping such a worthless fellow about you. So I advise you to put up with your loss, & look out for another servant; but if you are loth to part with him, & choose rather to proceed by law against him, let me know when you have made up your mind, & I will, <sup>instruct you what measures to take,</sup> put you in the proper train. But you have no time to lose, the sooner you determine the better. I thanked him, & told him that if I should have any thing further to trouble him with, I would take the liberty of calling again on the morrow. & then took my leave & withdrew.

I had not gone 100 yards from the magistrate's house in my way home, when, (lo & behold) on turning a corner, who should I meet but my runaway gentleman himself. As I came upon him unawares, he had not time to avoid me, & by his confusion & stammering it was plain that he was conscious of having done something amiss, & was afraid of my displeasure. I rated him severely for his conduct in leaving the ship, & asked him what could have induced him to commit so foolish an act. Sir, says he, to be sure what I did was not a tall disorderly, but I was so set agog by the sight of the shore that I could not resist; so watching an opportunity, I threw a spar overboard, & letting myself down the side, got ashore upon it, & drifted off. To be sure when I looked around, I found myself alone as it were upon the wide sea, & nobody near me, I began to be frightened; but the tide carried me along, & I could not go back - not <sup>if</sup> I could, I should have dared, for fear of getting a flogging. As soon as I could see the people walking on the shore, I called out a main to them - but what help could they be to me! However I soon got in among them, & tho' I was at first a bit afraid of them, I soon took heart - & then they were so kind and so civil that it made me ashamed somehow for the fight I had been in. If you'll please to forgive me this time, Sir, I'll never do the like again. — Well said I, but what have you done with the 100 Dollars. Upon my mentioning the money he looked <sup>a little</sup> askew, & continued silent for some time; at last he said "As for the money, Sir, I have partly laid it out for your honor long ago; & partly, please your honor, I thought you meant it for myself; & so the Captain's servant said — 'Aye aye', said I, 'I don't doubt but you are all alike — all for robbing your masters.'"

Pray what mighty sums did you lay out for me? Why Sir I paid the Cookes a Dollar apiece, & the Washerman 8 Dollars, and a Couple to the Captain's servant, as your honor desired me — besides what I gave at the Custom-house & also to the Carpenter for putting a new Lid on your Box, besides two or 3 other little jobs he did for you during the voyage. So you see, Sir, take it altogether the accounts dont stand so much against me: But however, I own Sir I remain your debtor, but there is no help for it, & I hope your honor will be so good as to forgive it, & begin afresh with me. If I understood you right, Sir, you'll stay here sometime, whether Sir you'll want a man that can speak the two languages; so, Sir, if you'll have the goodness to cancel out the old score, & begin anew with me, I promise you henceforth ~~to be~~ more circumspect, & not to go astray for the future. And you must not think, Sir, that I meant to keep away from you. I came here avowedly for the purpose of finding you out & asking your pardon; and I have already been at your house to enquire for you — You may ask the parlor, Sir, if it be not true? Aye aye, said I, no doubt your intentions now are excellent — professions cost nothing — but I cannot afford to lose my money in this manner — and as you have kept along so long, pray continue so, & don't come casting & whining to me. As I said this aloud, & with the air & manner of a person who is in earnest, he was very much struck, & albeit unused to the melting mood, the tears stood in the felon's eyes. Creeping up to me & throwing himself on his knees, he was beginning with "Alas, Sir —" where I stopped him, stepping aside & crying out acaunt! have done, have done, none of your pitiful tales here — I'll have nothing to say to you. For although I pitied him (yet) I thought it better not to seem too easy, lest he should think he might hereafter trick me with impunity. As I was afoot, & the heat of the day was now coming on ~~space~~

and ~~across the Poste~~ I made the best of my way to the house; Enquiring if my brother was arrived, was answered in the affirmative. This news gave me great pleasure, for I had not seen him for several years. I walked eagerly into the house, & calling out "James" was answered by the well known voice & in the well known phrase "anor anor sir" He came immediately out of his room; we rushed into each other's arms, & after repeated embraces, could hardly tear ourselves asunder.

B.

Agreeably to my promise I take the first opportunity of giving you an account of what has befallen me since I left ~~x~~. We set off early in the morning of the 6th, & by noon were got beyond ~~x~~: we passed some very pleasant grounds belonging to Mr ~~x~~. They are situated just below the village of ~~x~~; & the view is closed behind by the lofty hills of the province of ~~x~~. Now the borders of this province are at least 150 lgs distant, which proves that these hills, or mountain rather, are much higher than they are generally estimated. The day was very cloudy; the sun scarcely ever shone out 3 minutes together, or as it elegantly expressed it, was always playing at peep behind the clouds: so that the beauty of the prospect was greatly diminished: for we could not see the hills distinctly. The river here is very wide, & interspersed with several islands overgrown with trees & bushes: The external appearance of these islands is very beautiful, but within they are nothing but swamps & bogs & desolate places. A body of soldiers is always stationed near here to protect passengers against the robbers that harbour in these woods. We were bid to beware going out of the usual track. In passing one of these islands we saw a strange animal at a distance rolling in the sand, which seemed to be of immense bulk & of a singular shape. The body was adust by brown, & spotted with black, except the throat which was whitish. From its unwieldy motions I conjectured it to be an amphibious animal - Mr ~~x~~ maintained the contrary opinion. My conjecture conjecture was soon verified; for upon our firing a pistol it moved off towards the river, & shortly after plunged in & disappeared. No body on board had seen <sup>one</sup> of the kind before, except Mr. X who at last recollects that he had seen one in the province of X, & that he had been told they were very common in the province of X, or else in the province of X, he could not recollect which. This day the Master had half a mind to quarrel with me in consequence of my taking the part of a waterman he was beating, & saying a few words in his behalf. I told him to put up with such trifles, & to bear with his men more patiently. He said that it was not so much what the men had done as his insolent answers that he could not bear - befoke he thinks, continued he, that I am beholden to him; because he gave up other employment to come this voyage with me; but for the matter of that I'm sure he made a good bargain with me. He had better mend his manners; or I shall be even with him before we part. For the rest of the day the master behaved rather sulky toward me: he gave frequent hints that it would be as well if every one would mind his own business. In the Evening I contrived to bring him into good humour again by some civil things I said to him. I could not bear to be on bad terms with him; for he is a very good natured fellow at the bottom, tho' a little hot. & I must do him the justice to own that, during this little bickering, we had not an unpleasant word pass between us during the whole journey: On the contrary I was much beholden to him on many occasions both for the mirth & good humor he kept up on board & also for divers kindnesses he did me: & when we bid each other good bye at the end of our journey, I believe we were both sorry to part.

TM 1918.17.12

The next morning we were off betimes, having a long days work to make. About 10 we came to a place, where for 2 days together there was barely sufficient water for the boat to pass. Here <sup>one</sup> of the men, who had been sent <sup>on an errand</sup> into the neighboring town, tarried so long that we were obliged to leave him behind ..... I shall not fail to give you an account from time to time of whatever good or ill luck may betide me in future, & if ever it be in my power to do so. Farewell.

C.

That estate came into my possession under very particular circumstances. I cannot enter into a detail of the particulars now, any further than just to tell you that it was in consequence of a lawsuit between Mr. X and the village of X, about the right of feeding cattle on the adjoining Common. In this suit there was so much contrary evidence given, that the judges found it very difficult to determine. The Estate consists of X acres of arable land, & of X acres of pasture;

6.
and, I am certain, is capable of being very much improved.
I dare say it might be raised to double or even triple its present value.
It contains arable land enough to employ three couple of oxen.
Last year, owing to the great fall of rain in the spring, and the uncommon continuance of the drought in the latter part of the summer, the crops were very scanty: but in general it produces a great deal of both of wheat & other grain. A certain person, that I shall not name, told me the other day that as

D

"I defy anyone," said he, "to make out the drift of this letter. It seems to me to be down right nonsense. He talks a great deal about the dearth of provisions; & enters into a long detail of I don't know what about his Grandfather, & of the respect due to our family, & of the monies that are due to him, & of payments in kind in lieu of money, & of rents not duly paid, & of his entire submission to the will of his father; & repeats the same thing a dozen times. Besides the lens go uphill & downhill like" — "Dear me," interrupted the mother, "what signifies how it is written — Consider he is your elder brother, my dear; You should not run him down in that manner, especially when there really is no absurdity in his conduct. He is no scholar, we know, but his meaning is plain enough. He wants you to look over the accounts. You don't know what extreme pain you give me when you talk in that manner, or else, I am sure, you would check yourself. Do pray, be more moderate for the future. — & what do you mean to answer?" "That 'twould be an endless trouble to look over such accounts — that I have no time to spare; & that he must look out for assistance elsewhere. Or something to that effect". "Oh fie, my dear; at least return him a civil answer. Don't you see that if you act so, his creditors may suspect him to be bankrupt; & if you, who are his brother, refuse to help him in this emergency, who else will? You may perhaps effect a saving for him of several hundred Dollars, & your behaving unkindly to him on this ~~at~~ occasion may have a great effect on his future life. You should spare no pains, but use your utmost endeavour to extricate him from his difficulties. You'll lessen yourself in the eyes of all the world, if you refuse to assist him, or behave in the least unkind to him; neither would you ever forgive yourself if any thing was to happen to him."

7.

Take 18 or 20 of those sticks, no matter what length, and set them up endwise as even & exact as you can, at equal distances along the wall.

"You don't play fair! You ought to wait till I am upon the ground, & ready."

Nay; why don't you say I cheat?

Fair & softly, James! I only say you ~~take~~ play unfairly. i.e. you take undue advantages, or unfair advantages; whichever you choose to call it.

Well! I'd fain know what's the difference between cheating & taking an undue advantage! But never mind!

The difference may be easily shewn. For example; a powerful man insists upon his neighbour's parting with such a piece of ground contrary to his inclination. The neighbour dare not refuse him for fear of losing his superior's favor & protection. Nor the powerful man does not force him to comply. He does not cheat him, nor wrong him but he takes an undue advantage of his situation. Again, if a man shifts his ground in arguing, & thereby misleads an unskillful opponent, I say he argues unfairly; but I don't mean to imply that he cheats. But come, the game is finished; don't let us fall out about nothing. Shall we engage in a fresh one, or shall we go in & rest ourselves a little while?

I don't feel tired yet, & I am so sorry, that I am not fit to go in.

Well then Let's begin a new game. Come, fall into your places. Don't stand so far off each other - You stand too forward, John. Stand further back. Don't play so fast. I should be glad to know why you do not endeavour to catch that ball!

I could not, without running foul of James. Formerly they used to play this game in a different fashion; the adversaries stood facing each other, & the ground was open in front. There were 16 men on a side, formed into a regular line. We know this by the old song, beginning with "Fast by the river Dee".

How do they play it abroad? I don't know how they play it in other foreign countries; but in France they play it the same way as we do; only the form of the bat is different; & the person that holds the ball comes forward into the middle, & the foremost man in the line receives it first.

Then he must be always flitting to & fro. Now I think our method far better. Apropos of that song you mentioned; you have not fulfilled your promise of writing it out for me.

Yes. I have written out the greater part of it; & will set about the remainder over forthwith. but there is one stanza I find I have misjudged, beginning with "Forth from his tent". It should be look to leave it out, as the idea is very fine. And there is another want, not at all inferior in beauty, which I cannot rightly recollect. It commences with the line "To shoo off my purpose I will not forego", or something of that sort, & ends with "Hard hap war his, howbeit he plain'd not." Tis a curious piece of antiquity; we may gather from it many particulars relative to the manners of those times. And 'tis likewise a fine composition. But come! 'tis getting late. The ground is growing damp. Let's go in.

G.

He was very kind to the poor people. What he could spare of the produce of his grounds he generally gave away to them gratis. ~~He~~ <sup>himself</sup> ~~seldom~~ eat much of the fruit that grew in his orchard for he let the poor children of the village go in & gather it as they liked. Formerly he held a high office under government. His son headed the troops that were sent against the rebels, & defeated them at —, & from hence he acquired (the son I mean) the name of xx; Tis very well known that the issue of that battle hindered many from joining the Rebels. Latterly, poor man, he grew quite childish

H.

Heyday, Charles, what is the matter with you! You look as if you had been crying. What's that <sup>mark upon</sup> ~~matter with~~ your head? Come hither, child, let me look at it. Hush! hush! Don't cry for such a trifling as that. You'd a great boy almost 5 years old! What is become of your little waggon?

Papa, one of the hind wheels is come off of itself.

Here, take this cake: don't eat it all. Let William go halves with you. I wish you'd halve it, papa.

Who are those three boys running yonder? They seem to be in high glee.

The hindmost is xx, papa; I don't know who the other two are.

Have you got ready your presents - you recollect that your mamma's birthday is only 3 days hence. 'Tis the day after tomorrow, you know.

We walked into the inner room, & found him there intent on his work, which he glanced his eye over from time to time with marks of inward satisfaction. Upon seeing us, he immediately got up, & shaking us heartily by the hand, insisted upon our staying dinner. We accepted his offer, expecting he was alone; but instead of that, he had a large party in so much that there was hardly room ~~for~~ enough at the table. He gave several instances of absence of mind during dinner - such as forgetting the names of his most intimate friends, & drinking his wine without noticing any one.

H.

Keep moving, or we shall never get through the crowd: If you had kept your promise with me, & come at 8 o'clock, we should have had no trouble. I have no idea there would be so many people; tho' indeed, to speak the truth, I was not up at 8 o'clock.

The more I say for you, the later you will be.

I was not in bed till very late, not till past two.

And what is your general hour? About 12. It's very bad for the health to keep such late hours. Well we are through at length;

thank God. Now let us call on Mr xx: he'll take it kind of us. I hear he keeps his bed in his lodges; he keeps house. He has had an estate left him by his uncle, & he lives now in high style: he keeps a close carriage, & a couple of riding horses. Times are quite altered with him since you & I used to know him formerly; when his father kept a fruit shop, & his mother took in plainwork.

Well, I am glad he has had such good luck. He deserves it. He has been very industrious, & is an excellent hearted fellow.

I think, I had as lief be a sailor as a soldier. They are similar lives of life; & I should be at a loss if I were forced to choose. If a soldier be sometimes more at his ease than a sailor, & (from) being ashore, has more amusement for his leisure hours, & is not so liable to be called up at midnight, yet he is no less worked than the sailor, & has not always so sure a shelter at night. They both of them endure great hardships, & notwithstanding the honour & glory they gain, I must needs say I think their situation not desirable.

The taxes they pay in ~~xx~~ are next to nothing; nevertheless they complain as if they were cruelly pinched.
In that affair I stood neutral.
He was all night drowned. (or) He was within a little of being drowned. (or) He was very near being drowned.

O
That tree is a pleasing object.
My object was to make him acknowledge that he said so, and gained my point.
I don't object to their standing on the outside.
Shut the outer door.
Take off the outer ~~ward~~ window.
But upon you!

I own I was in the wrong.
It did not occur to me that he al<sup>l</sup>uded to your particular accident.
"ofttimes beneath your shady tree"
It was an odd accident.
Even or odd?
He is his master's own child
Six to one is <sup>the</sup> great odds.
I am otherwise engaged.

P.
The birds begin to pair off.
I want a pair of boots.
There don't fit me properly.
If peradventure there be 3 men
You must do it perforce.
She pulled it out piece meal.
She has a place in the custom house.
You have got my place.
This is a pleasant place.
Play it on the table.
Why do you speak in the plural?
I intended to enter a process against him.
He was lying prone on the ground.

I did not think it possible for a man to put himself with that posture.
Tis not in my power.
What a row of learning he knew!
He was prior to my time.
The process of making soap is not difficult.
The process of time then became corrupted.
Some moralists say man is prone to evil.
You were very <sup>rightly</sup> properly served properly speaking, all things that breathe are called animals.
Tis not properly fastened.

I charged him with it <sup>blank</sup>,
What a quantity of fruit he has in his garden,
the trees are quite loaded.
You are quite out goot he.
They gave no quarter.
Oh! Does the wind blow from that quarter?
After that they went into winter quarters.
A quarter of a pound.
Quarter this orange.

Q.
People of Quality.
What Quality would you like to have it ma'am.
He has a great many good qualities.
The crops were excellent this year both in quality & quantity.

R

You talk at random

I quaffed at random

A random shot.

That does not regard me.

He is a relation of mine

That story bears no relation to the subject.

By doing so you'll render me a service.

By paying a little attention to you'll render yourself more agreeable.

Pay them their respective dues
& send them about their business.

Pay them their dues respectively,
& send me.

For God's sake

Keep it for my sake

For the sake of peace and quietness

He is my namesake.

They are all the same.

Tis the same to me

That's the very self same expression that your brother used.

You'll have nothing by that.

Fruit is very scarce this year

He has no scope for his genius.

Give me more scope.

There's scope (there) for argument.

Seven score sheep.

The 4 seasons.

This meat is not well searoned.

He searoned his discourse with several entertaining anecdotes.

This weather is very unseasonable.

Tis now the season for fish.

Walnuts are out of season now.

They are now in full season.

Take the second

What will be my second?

I'll second you.

I second that motion.

This is my second fall today.

That's a (very) secondary considera-

I could not rest last night.
Sit by the rest for to-morrow.
He deals in that article both wholesale & retail.

Whatever news she hears, she goes and retails out to the whole village.

I cannot get rid of this nasty cold.
Draw round the table.

The guard goes his rounds every two hours.

You gave it him roundly.

S

Saying that he is your senior you ought to see.

The love of self overcomes up & up other considerations with him.

What is the sense of his passage?

The sense of hearing.

I have a due sense of his merits.

That is not true in any sense.

Surely you are out of your senses.

There is a sensible change in the weather.

Put them separate.

Lack of the Clerks has his separate department.

The rooms are separated by a slight partition.

Separate the threads.

The rains are set in.

That sole sets off your complexion.

You set light by what I say.

She set a subscription foot for the suffrages.

That noise sets my teeth on edge.

Let this pen knife.

If you but once made a good setting.

If you'll find it easy afterwards.

We set forward again on the 20th.

The setting of the sun.

The messengers, after waiting about

2 or 3 hours, were severely despatched with their (respective) answers.

We shaped our course for the northern islands.

I am making up with this.

He was just too fit.

You must shift for yourself.

Shift.

It was sheer ignorance.
It does not signify talking through between them.
He signified his intent tongue by a letter.
Do you know what that mechanism signifies?
He is a singular man
Pray sit down.
This is rather of a round
size.
There he goes slapdash.
So you went in instead.
It's somewhere among those books.
I was in a sore fight.
It was sorely against my will.
He is a sorry fellow.
My mother's gone.
In good sooth thou art somewhat obscure in thy words.
Put it somewhere out of the way.
Sometimes white and sometimes red.

You have not left space
in the space of 3 days.
By special licence.
Specify the different sorts
He ran away full speed.
God speed you.
Sometimes the moon &
haste the woe speed
I have left my spouse
at the iron.
I wrote it on the spur of the occasion.
The board is divided into 16 squares.
He has been stark mad,
he has had the stoutest coat on.
Strictly speaking I have seen him today, but it was at a great distance.
He keeps a street hand
over his son.
There is no more stuff.
A ~~house~~ sort of stuff.
House hold stuff.
Tis stuff'd with cotton.

Stark naked.
A man of large stature.
Is but a step from here
to this way.
That none stands for nothing.
The mark. I land for reception of the preceding character.
He is not got on one step.
Three & Stirling.
Stealing merit.
I am reduced to great straits.
And straitway he departed.
You shant lay a step on that woe.
I lay no step on what he says.
Laymen in by steps of Weather.
What stuff you talk.
You'll likely succeed.
He succeeded not.
He leaped it every succeeding year.
It was a sudden fight
All on a sudden he changed his mind.
He died suddenly.

To tend sheep.
To tend a sick person
whether tends his disease Such measures tend to alienate the affections of thy people.
Such measures have a bad tendency.
From  $\frac{1}{2}$  to  $\frac{1}{2}$  is 33  $\frac{1}{2}$ or  $\frac{1}{2}$  to  $\frac{1}{2}$  is 13.
Then there is no ~~such~~
~~so far~~ through his years
I'll forgive you for this once, tho' you don't deserve it.

There is a three fold condition
between  $\frac{1}{2}$  and  $\frac{1}{2}$ .
Thrice he doest back.
Are there no terrors of him?
Place them thus, one touching the other.
Give him what he deserves, a good scalding, to wit.
Take the top off.
It lies atop.
I contract one very ill.
He treated the company.
What does that look treat of?

They are treating about treks.
It was quite a treat.
She treated us with a song.
Bad treatment.
A triple alliance.
Not twice in a two months.
You have a two fold
advantage over him.

It wants a quarter to 10.
What do you want?
There's a link working here.
It wants more sugar.
That city is divided into 5 wards.
He is my brother's ward.
Sickly I wounded off the blow.
Oh! If you will go there is room enough.
The magistrate issued a warrant to apprehend
him.
Which way should I cut this?
You are welcome, Sir.
You gave me a hearty welcome.
Whereabout is it?
I have not wherewithal.
Whether he behaved it or not I don't know.
You are every whit as bad as your brother.

Never
I am not a whit the wiser now.
I am not a bit a.
Whoever aid it, 'tis a great falsehood.
I was wholly taken up
with attending the chel'd.
You are a kind of themark.
There is a wide difference
between  $\frac{1}{2}$  and  $\frac{1}{2}$ .
See left a strange wife
behind him.
What's your will, Sir.
He bears you no good will.
I would willingly have done with her.
He has a great deal of wit.
I war at my wits end.
You should not set your hot against a child.
Woe betide you, by Jove.
He grew sleepy as he is wont to do after dinner.

What will the world say?
I know not what in the world to do with him.
He began the world with a Just for all the world as if he
He is behind hand in the world.
A world of learning.
Let me know the honest.
You had the worst gift.
You make the world of it.
Let the world come to the worst.
Their army was worsted in three engagements, successively.
You have given him the full worth of it.
A world of worth.
He is over more than he is worth.
Tis not worth while.
Truth, worth 10 of the others.
World to god earliest behavior yourself better.
You have him if you think you have put it on the wrong side outwards.
Who's in the wrong? You think.
There's a wrong way, &
a right way.

Yain creature!

Tiz in vain.

Vain world, farewell.

Tis vastly hot.

The is vastly improved.

You have done it with a vengeance, now.

You can't come at him,

so you wreak your vengeance <sup>up</sup> on me.

During the two coldest months, viz. Jan & Dec.

There was a good deal of under hand dealing in that affair.

The soldiers in their uniforms.

His behaviour is uniform and of a piece throughout.

Tis the universal opinion that he is

He is universally allowed to be the best scholar in

He is a universal ~~scholar~~ scholar.

Unlucky son lay some thing by those papers

You'll have them all

Brown away.

He is very unlike what he was a few years ago.

That's not at all unlucky

Until when

The upper rooms are very pleasant.

Stand up right.

He is an upright man

The world is turned upside down, I think.

Do your utmost.

I was in the utmost danger.

Did you hear what strange sounds he walked as he went past us.

I will be his utter ruin.

He will be utterly ruined by it.

Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, & I will give you rest.

The rivers fail, yea even the very springs are dried up.

Tis leap year.

Yet, he came yesterday.

Not yet, stay awhile

As yet there is no harm done

And yet why should you trouble yourself about it?

Though he spoke rudely, yet still you ought to have answered

him.

In days of yore -

Fris